Description

In the 1920s, unsavory cads were known to hang around the Flatiron Building hoping to get a gander of some young thing's petticoats (it seems the unusual wind currents generated by the building's unique architecture caused a rather severe updraft). Constables patrolling the fashionable shopping district would often shoo these bounders away with a shout of "Twenty-three skidoo!" We're sure you'll learn more high-minded trivia on this 90-minute tour of the storied neighborhood, which also stops at the original FAO Schwarz and the New York Life Insurance building.

When

Sundays .
